regained by means of railroad transport, a decision justified by subsequent events, and although Girouard was at own discretion.

It was in particular the 200 miles of November, in 1897, across the unknown and waterless Nubian desert, debouching on the Nile at Atbara, which ren-dered possible the victories of Atbara and Omdurman, and the destruction of the power of the Mahdi. For this Girouard received the thanks of Parlia ment, his promotion to a majority and several orders, besides the presidency the Egyptian State Railroads and Telegraphs. On the outbreak of the South Afri-can War, and the dispatch of Lord Kitchener to the Transvaal, he summoned Girouard to take charge of railroad transportation and construction there, and contributed so much thereby to the ultimate defeat of the Boers that he was knighted, and invested with the star of the Order of St. Michael and

St. George.

While in South Africa he fell in love with the daughter of Sir Richard Solo mon, the very wealthy legal adviser of the Transvaal administration, and married her. After that he became governor and commander-in-chief of that vast African empire known as British Nigeria, extending over an area of half a million square miles, with a population of about 30,000,000, and greatly developed the resources of that dependency by means of the construc-tion of railroads, by tactful diplomatic negotiations with native chiefs, and by means of several very successful armed expeditions. Thereupon he became governor of British East Africa, a position which he held when he retired last year.
